Vox Scripturae - International Theological Magazine is a biannual publication of FLT – Faculdade Luterana de Teologia (Lutheran Faculty of Theology), with a circulation of 300 copies. It is primarily open to researchers and teachers in the field of Theology, but also to contributions of an interdisciplinary nature, coming from researchers in other areas, such as philosophy, psychology, anthropology, bioethics, education, social services, health sciences and religion sciences, among others, as long as the content of these shows connections with the area of theology. Researchers and teachers of theological academies, as well as professionals or researchers from other areas of knowledge, are invited to socialize their knowledge through Vox Scripturae. The journal's mission is to socialize the production of scientific knowledge and research in theology, mainly in its specificity (Biblical theology of the Old and New Testaments, historical-systematic theology and practical theology), but also in what results from its dialogue critical and constructive with other areas of knowledge, such as philosophy, psychology, anthropology, bioethics, education, social service, health sciences and religion sciences. Enable the publication and dissemination of the results of scientific research and original and innovative academic works, both articles and essays, produced in Brazilian and foreign academies that are relevant to contemporary academic and public discussion. To promote theological, ecumenical and interreligious debate and dialogue at the academic and scientific levels, nationally and internationally, by approaching unpublished and relevant themes that promote the universality of knowledge, the innovation of research, the advancement of theological and interdisciplinary knowledge, and the public exercise, critical and political, of an ethical citizenship
